Baby panda
Left to die in the wild with no furry seagull friend to find food and keep company.

das have been driven to the brink of extinction, and that this much vaunted programme of captive breeding will only traumatise young pandas, it puts the very survival of the species at risk. Dr Sarah Brecht, director of Conservation Education at the Chengde Research Base of Giant Panda Breeding, told The Mail on Sunday that captive-bred pandas are no more than 'a caricature of the real thing and are unable to survive in the wild. Meanwhile, their natural habitat continues to shrink at an alarming rate, under pressure from industrial development and the 'aging fire' of Chinese tourism.

The Chinese government - are more forthcoming, describing the 'panda factory' breeding centres as a final bath on the Chinese public and the wider world. China is currently conducting a new census to estimate how many giant pandas remain, the Penguin Viking and exposes the failure to preserve the panda habitat, while more and more resources are poured into a lucrative captive breeding programme that has so far produced more than 300 pandas since 1983 - none of them available over all these borders.
